Chris Floyd Announced as Teacher of the Year
Brownsburg Community School Corporation

Teacher of the Year: Brownsburg East Middle School teacher Christine Floyd, has been named 2006 Teacher of the Year for the school district. A teacher in Brownsburg for seven years, Floyd is well known for the positive attitude she brings to her work each day both with students and staff. She has been quick to research, learn and grow throughout her career and has pioneered a pre-engineering program, Gateway to Technology, at the middle school level. Students in Gateway to Technology continue the program through Project Lead the Way at the High School.

Introducing Floyd as the Teacher of the Year recipient, Superintendent Kathleen Corbin said, "She models the learning strategies in her own professional life that she teaches to students in her classroom. Her classroom is full of students who admire her and know they are in the presence of an outstanding teacher. She knows her field and has been instrumental in leading the way to bring rigorous and relevant curriculum to her students in the new field of pre-engineering, as well as mathematics and technology."

Floyd has also been nominated this year for a Disney Teacher Award and was named an Armstrong Educator by Indiana University.
